FAQs

The Greensboro Police Department (GPD) was one of the first agencies to use body worn cameras to provide perspective of police-community interactions. Here are a few FAQs.

How do I know I'm being recorded?

You are recorded, per GPD policy, when police officers are responding to a call for service and/or conducting proactive policing activities (such a vehicle stop). Police are not required to record the entire time they are at work; including casual conversations with members of the public.

Who can see the video?

Typically, only those captured on the video from an officer's Body Worn Camera can watch the video according to North Carolina law. State legislation also requires a verification process from the police department. This protects our residents. For additional specifics about who else is legally allowed to watch these videos, please go to the following website: www.greensboro-nc.gov/BWCvideo to get more details.

How can I watch the video?

To watch the video, you must complete a form online (www.greensboro-nc.gov/BWCvideo) or call or come to the Professional Standards Division for assistance with completing this form. Please allow three working days for processing.

THE OFFICER CANNOT SHOW YOU THE VIDEO IMMEDIATELY.
